

How could parents assist their children in adapting to the NSS curriculum?

- Parents could provide proper guidance for their children and instil in them positive values and attitudes.
- Parents should develop their children's active and independent learning attitudes through daily-life activities, let their children enjoy what they have achieved in learning and understand their learning progress.

How could parents assist their children in adapting to the NSS curriculum?

- Parents should enhance communication with the schools to get a clear picture of the learning progress of and difficulties encountered by their children.
- Parents should render appropriate support to assist their children in learning to learn in light of the changes in the curriculum and learning approaches.

How could parents assist their children in adapting to the NSS curriculum?

- Parents should encourage their children to develop extensive reading habits.
- Parents should encourage their children to participate in Other Learning Experiences (e.g. Community Service, Physical Development, Aesthetic Development) to achieve all-round development. Impact of such experiences on personal growth is usually positive and long-lasting.

